ANAGER ROBINSON of the Dodgers said last night he would pitch a left hander today, and that whether that left hander would be Marquard or Smith depended on how each warmed up. He fully expects Coveleskie will be sent to the mound by Speaker. He isn't quite decided whether to start Griffith or Neis in right field, but the probable lineups will be: CLEVELAND.

The sale of $1 and $2 tickets, same being the bleachers, began at the park windows yesterday and went ahead with no undue commotion. The fans were much less fussed about it than four years ago. The lines formed quietly and never became very long. Nor did they become very whort, so that the sale went forward steadily. There weren't any lines reaching around the block, and nobody spent the night leaning up against the fence in order to be the first at the window when it opened. The sale of bleucher tickets was quite a sedate ceremony, on the whole.

Nevertheless a capacity crowd is expected to-day. Every reserved seat had been disposed of yesterday. Interest outside of the city may be judged by the demand for press tickets. More than 400 requests for these were received, which is about a hundred more than four years ago, when Brooklyn and the Red Sox battled.

INDIANS CHEERED | Cleveland Enters Series Favorite Over Dodgers

Stick to the Finish Club" Public Veers Toward Brooklyn at Eleventh Hour, but Indians Still Are the Choice in the Betting, at Narrow Odds of 5 to 6.

By DANIEL. Copyright, 1929, by The New York Herald

HERE was an eleventh hour shift toward the Dodgers yesterday. For more than a week the New York baseball public had been content to accept the dictum that the Cleveland club appeared to be the stronge outfit in the world's series, and the odds accordingly stood at 4 to 5, with the Indians the favorites. Yesterday the public's estimate of the chances of the Brooklyns experienced a change. However, while some of the betting was done at even money, the Indians still were favored in most of the wagering at 5 to 6. There was a strong feeling that the Dodgers would win the series, but this failed to make Brooklyn the favorite in whatever little wagering was done. In places where big bets were recorded on world's series of the past there was continued apathy yesterday. Wall and Broad streets declined to rouse themselves from their lethargy with regard to the financial side of the clashes between the Dodgers and the Indians. One house on Broad street offered something like $10,000 at oods of 5 to 6 on Cleveland.

The main reason for the popular veering toward the Dodgers was a reconsideration of the pitching situation on the contending clubs. It was held that Wilbert Robinson, with Smith, Marquard and Mitchell, left handers, and Grimes, Pfeffer, Manaux and Cadore, right handers, possesses a far more formidable array for a nine game series than can be presented by Tris Speaker. Cleveland admittedly has two wonders in Coveleskie and Bagby. Caldwell has not been going well of late nor has Morton. Malls, the onetime Dodger, who joined the Indians not so long ago, may be one of the surprise of the series. But it would not surprise us if Mails failed to figure to any

The "dope" on pitching without question gives the edge to the Dodgers. However, it must be remembered that teams have won the world' series with as few as two pitchers. The Giants turned the trick in 190 against the Athletics with only Christy Mathewson and Joe McGinnity. The Cubs, with only Tyler and Vaughn, gave the Red Sox rather a hard battle in 1918.

Cleveland Has a Great Asset in Catcher O'Nelli.

"Dope," after all, is nothing more than "dope." Sometimes we get the impression that "dope" is made only to be joited. If Cleveland is forced to concede inferiority in pitching it declines absolutely to yield in anything else. In the catching department it outclasses the Dodgers, and we want to emphasize the fact that a great catcher is a bigger asset in a world's series than the general public imagines. George Gibson for the Pirates in 1909 against the Tigers, Johnny Kling for the Cubs against the Tigers in 1908. Hank Gowdy for the Braves in 1914, Wallie Schang for the Athletics against the Giants in 1913 and Ray Schall: for the White Sox against the Giants in gave them a rouging send-off. James C. 1917 all demonstrated the power which a great catcher may wield in the Dunn, president of the Cleveland club, baseball classic.

In O'Neill the Cleveland club has one of the greatest backstops in the ne—as a receiver certainly the best there is. He is brainy and resourceful—the kind of a player whose presence behind the plate cannot be over-estimated. Nunamaker and Thomas make worthy assistants to O'Neill. Miller and Elliott of the Dodgers do not begin to compare with O'Neill. Against a faster club than the Indians the handicap in the catching department would be well nigh fatal to Brooklyn. But the Indians, at that, are pretty fast, for they have stolen more bases than the Dodgers, who are not a slow aggregation themselves. The Indians stole seventy-four bases and the Dodgers sixtynine. And the peculiar part of it is that the Indians also have more sacrifice to their credit. They made 193 as against 183 for the Brooklyns. Usually the team which is faster on the bases is slower to use the sacrifice game

Cleveland Club Is a Hard Hitting Aggregation.

In figuring the chances of Cleveland and Brooklyn one fact stands out in bold relief. It is a fact which strikes the eye as well as the mind—a most potent and impressive fact. And that is the team batting average of the Cleveland club for the pennant season—a large and juicy .302. The Dodgers hit for .273. Granted that Brooklyn has something on Cleveland in pitching, is it big enough to discount the Indians' superiority with the bat? We are inclined to believe that it is not. A man who hits .300 is regarded as a pretty useful citizen with the claymore. But how about twenty-three batsmen averaging up that way, with eight regulars averaging .310? The eight regulars of the Dodgers have an average of .288. It becomes evident that any team with that sort of hitting strength is going to be formidable every minute and is going to make a vigorous attack on the pitching and the morale of th hitting in a world's series point to the experience of the Red Sox against the Cubs in 1918, when the Bosten team won, in spite of its inability to hit as high as .190. However, it will be remembered, too, that the Cubs were not very lusty clubbers either in that series. It was a pitchers' battle all the way and the team with the better pitching won. But when it comes to great pitching being pitted against good pitching and hard hitting, we believe that the second combination in seven cases out of ten will triumph.

grand stand. Judging from attendance figures which have come to hand, the first two Saturdays of the campaign already have set a record. Opening game attendances at every college were shattered—and that in spite of the heat a week ago last Saturday.

Big attendances ruled last Saturday. More than 17,000 persons saw Pennsylvania beat Bucknell, while more than 12,600 watched the Yale team get going. The Yale Bowl, by the way, is being rebuilt in a way so that it can seat more persons and seat them more comfortably. Probably 10,000 fans saw Columbia start its season, and about 6,000 gathered at Princeton to give the Tiger a sendoff. Nearly 11,000 saw Harvard play its second game.
